Notes on Contributors

Camille Atkinson earned a BA in English literature at Loyola Marymount University and an MA in philosophy at Claremont Graduate School. A move to New York City got her further involved in community outreach and activism while she earned her PhD at the New School for Social Research. Since then, her path from one end of the country to the other has fueled her diverse interests, added to her professional accomplishments, and expanded her life experience. Most recently, her adventurous spirit has led her to Maine where teaches at Southern Maine Community College, explores the rugged terrain, and enjoys the seasons. catkinson28@gmail.com

Thomas Brommage earned his B.A. at Manhattanville College in New York and his Ph.D. at the University of South Florida in Tampa. He has previously taught at the University of Tampa, Denison University, and the University of West Georgia. He is currently a Lecturer in Philosophy at Sam Houston State University in Huntsville, TX. His academic interests lie mostly in the history of early analytic philosophy, philosophical logic and the philosophy of language. He has held several officer positions in the Lighthearted Philosophers’ Society since its inception, including serving as President from 2012-2015. brommage@gmail.com

Michael Cundall is the Director of the University Honors Program and an assistant professor of philosophy at North Carolina A & T University. His areas of research are the philosophy of psychology, cognitive science, and humor studies. He also has teaching interests in the history and philosophy of science and early modern philosophy. His work in honors focuses on student success and curriculum development. mcundall@ncat.edu

Steven Gimbel is the Edwin T. and Cynthia Shearer Johnson Professor for Distinguished Teaching in the Humanities and chair of the Department of Philosophy at Gettysburg College. He earned the College’s Luther and Bernice Johnson Award for Distinguished Teaching. Among his recent books are Exploring the Scientific Method: Cases and Questions and Defending Einstein: Hans Reichenbach’s Writings on Space, Time, and Motion. He blogs frequently at Philosophers’ Playground. sgimbel@gettysburg.edu

Al Gini is a Professor of Business Ethics and Chair of the Department of Management at Loyola University Chicago and is an associate editor of Business Ethics Quarterly. agini@luc.edu
Chris Kramer is an associate professor and academic chair of the philosophy department at Rock Valley College. He is also creator and advisor of the college philosophy club – “That club than which none greater can be conceived”. His interests in philosophy cover the philosophy of humor, philosophy of mind, philosophy of religion, ethics, and inductive logic. He has published on humor, laughter, phenomenology, existentialism, Louis C.K., and Jonathan Swift. He recently completed his dissertation on “Subversive Humor” (Marquette 2015). C.Kramer@rockvalleycollege.edu

Liz Sills is an Instructor of Communication Studies at Louisiana State University. She received her PhD from LSU and her M.A. in Communication Studies from the University of Montana. Her interests lie in the rhetoric, philosophy, and political consequences surrounding comedy, humor, and any other catalysts of mirth that constitute ‘The Funny’. Other examples of her work may be found in Empedocles: European Journal for the Philosophy of Communication and in the 2013 Eisner Award-winning volume Black Comics: Politics of Race and Representation. She also enjoys teaching standup comedy skills to her students and hosting workshops that teach community members how to understand and make use of the funniness of their everyday lives. liz.sills@gmail.com

Sophia Stone is an Assistant Professor at Lynn University, teaching in the Dialogues of Learning core curriculum. Her love and passion is Plato and all things related to ancient Greece, however, she also occupies her mind thinking about humor and devotes some time to its study. Whereas Socrates is thought to have said that the unexamined life is not worth living, Professor Stone thinks that the to gelaion, (‘the laughable’ in life) is worth examining. sstone@lynn.edu

Elizabeth Victor is an assistant professor of philosophy at William Paterson University in Wayne, NJ. She earned her Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of South Florida. Her research lies at the intersection of feminist theory, the nature of action and agency, and ethics. In humor studies, she is particularly interested in the use of humor to challenge and perpetuate stereotypes and social inequalities. victore@wpunj.edu